Some of the stories ramble a little, as the reader might expect from people who remember accidents fifty years ago. However, the point of view in person with the minimal modification makes the most riveting anecdotes of a direct narrative story. Conclusions The Marines of Montford Point provides information on an important part of our nation's military history, through the viewpoint of those who have made it - the point of view of men who have opened the way for today's integrated armed forces. The book ends with a high note with a chapter entitled "Legacy". Here, respondents discuss what their time in Montford Point and the Marine Corps means for them and reflect on the maybe small part they played to eliminate discrimination. The organization of Montford Point Marines, largely composed of later members of the Marine Corps, also continues to meet to keep alive the memory of the original members and their successes. In collaboration with this book, the University of North Carolina Wilmington has created a site dedicated to Montford Point Marines. It contains the complete transcripts of all interviews in the book, as well as a link to a documentary about Montford Point Marines. The documentary includes clips of some of the men interviewed, telling anecdotes, many of which were included in the book. It is another great way to learn more about this story. Drawing from interviews to 60 veterans, the Montford Point marines tell the experiences of these pioneers in their words. From their Let us learn their reasons for enlisting; their arrival at Montford Point and the training they received there; their lives in a separate military and in the Jim Crow South; their experiences of combat and service in the Second World War, Korea and Vietnam; and their inheritance. The Marines speak with flashes of anger and humor, sometimes with pain, sometimes with great wisdom and always with a pride favored by incredible results in front of adversity. This book serves to recognize and honor the men who have desegregated the Marine Corps and served their country in three important wars. The U.S. Army was forced to begin recruiting and enlisting African Americans. The first black recruits received basic training at the separate Camp Montford Point, adjacent to Camp Lejeune, near Jacksonville, North Carolina. This book, in collaboration with the documentary film with the same name, tells the story of these African American marine pioneers. Drawing from interviews with 60 veterans, Melton McLaurin refers in the words of the Marines their reasons for enlisting; their arrival at Montford Point and the training they received there; their lives in a separate military and in the Jim Crow South; their experiences of combat and service in the Second World War, Korea and Vietnam; and their inheritance. This book serves to recognize and honor the men who have desegregated the Marine Corps and served their country in three important wars. The essay of the military narrative with an executive order of President Franklin Roosevelt in 1941, the U.S. Marine Corps-the last All-All-All-White Army- was forced to begin recruiting and enlisting African Americans. Between 1942 and 1949 (when the base was closed following the order of President Truman in 1948, deseguring all the military forces) more than 20,000 men trained in Montford Point, most of whom continued to serve in the Pacific Theater in the Second World War as members of support units. This book, in collaboration with the documentary film with the same name, tells the story of these marines for the first time. From their stories, we learn their reasons to enlist; their arrival in Montford Point and the training they received there; their lives in a separate soldier and in the Jim Crow South; their experiences of combat and service in the Second World War, in Korea and Vietnam; and their heredity.
